

Wesley K. Clark & Associates, Witt Global Partners and Twinnovate partners up for a worldwide Project Development Cooperation in the biobased market.

The USA based companies Wesley K. Clark & Associates LLC, Witt Global Partners and Dutch based company Twinnovate B.V. have agreed to actively cooperate on international biobased projects and waste management with the main objective to reduce CO2 emissions.

Parties aim to significantly reduce CO2 emissions by implementing new technologies, new insights into how to deal with biomass and (agriculture) waste as contribute to long-term solutions that can operate independently of subsidy or grants. No competition with food production, no harm to the environment and affordable for all involved are the main drivers. This collaboration creates a network that together will lead the market towards professionalism and accelerate opportunities within the energy transition market. With the first projects under negotiation, the expectations are high.

“We believe that it is time to act if we realistically want to decrease CO2 emissions and we believe that Twinnovate is the right partner for the development of these international projects” says General Wesley K. Clark (ret.).

“We are very proud to have signed this partnership agreement which will accelerate the possibilities offered in the biomass market worldwide. Based on the existing long relationship between the partners and the additional services they provide into this partnership, we are convinced that biomass finally will take their place into the transition to a sustainable future”; comments John Bouterse, Managing Director of Twinnovate B.V.

“We are grateful that we can use our network and knowledge within this cooperation to encourage more sustainable use of our raw materials. The intention to realize affordable energy supplies for disadvantaged areas has our primarily interest”, says James Lee Witt, Owner of Witt Global Partners.
